HONGKONG, OCTOBER 14th, 1893.

There are not a few who predict that the Indian currency experiment will result in failure. Professor J. STEED NICHOLSON, who has an article on the subject in the last number of the Contemporary, though he apparently admits that the Government may ultimately succeed in giving the rupee a fixed gold value, thinks that before this result is arrived at there will be a period of possible disaster. In concluding his article he says:—"The probability is that 'felt exchange will be for a time worse than before. Thus, so far as present difficulties are concerned, the remedy can only be compared to relieving a starving man by compelling him to buy an annuity for his old age." So far, though the rupee has not kept at 1s. 4d., it has remained above the silver level, but as the action of the Indian Government caused a sensible fall in silver it may still be a matter of doubt whether exchange between England and India is really any better than it would have been had no action at all been taken. But even supposing the rupee be ultimately maintained steadily at 1s. 4d., or whatever rate may be fixed upon, the difference between the coin and the value of the silver the coin contains must be looked upon as a tax which has to be paid by the people in some form or other. This is a point which has more than once been dwelt upon in these columns and it is scarcely mentioned by Professor Nicholson in the following paragraph:—"Hitherto the question has been discussed merely as a financial expedient of the Indian Government. As such it is an attempt to avoid an increase of taxation, to avoid a deficit due to a fall in value (for remittance) of the taxes at present received. In order that the rupees devoted to the payment of foreign debts may go further, it is proposed to raise the value of all rupees, or what is the same thing, to prevent a further fall. The method is to stop the coinage, so as to produce by artificial limitation a scarcity value. The result can only be to substitute indirect for direct taxes; or taxes that are not seen for taxes that are seen. As such it may be politically desirable or necessary. Just so may be the issue of inconvertible notes 'in case of need. But the necessity ought to be extreme. India will still have to ship so much produce to England to realise gold for the payment of her home charges, and the quantity of produce required for this purpose will not be lessened by calling the rupee 1s. 4d. The rupees themselves will not be shipped, or if it is only to be a fiction, the Government to keep the rupee at a fixed rate, but to give the coin a fictitious value cannot in any way increase the wealth of the country, any more than watching stock increases the real value of a company's property. On the other hand it may, by its effects on trade, operate very prejudicially.

Some of the ways in which shutting out silver is calculated to damage trade are pointed out by Professor Nicholson. Suppose, he says, that owing to the closure of the mints no silver is sent to India, that it acts in the manner of a prohibitive duty, either other imports must take the place of silver or exports from India must be diminished, or both events must occur. If other imports take the place of silver, commercial bills compete with Council bills; if exports diminish there is a less demand for the latter. Again, the silver refused by India will be sent to other countries. In this way they will increase their exports at the expense of India. Thus, whatever benefits are to be expected ultimately from the gold standard, it seems probable that during the period of transition the closure of the mints will be injurious to India's trade and useless to her finance. Such is the Professor's argument, and it seems to us incontrovertible. If the Straits Settlements follow India's example and adopt the rupee or a protected dollar as their currency the silver now sent there would instead be sent to China and Japan so long as those countries were willing to take it, and the trade of China and Japan would be proportionately stimulated. But the change would have a better justification in the Straits than in India, for whereas the latter is a great producing country and the fictitious value of the rupee necessarily acts as an additional tax on the producer, Singapore and Penang, like Hongkong, are mere depots for trade, with a gold currency on the one side and a silver currency on the other. In determining what their own currency shall be, therefore, the considerations that arise are of a different character from those which apply in the case of a producing country. It would, for instance, be a great mistake for China to discard silver for gold, but it does not necessarily follow that it would be a great mistake for Hongkong to do so, for we have no agricultural interest that would be prejudicially affected by the change, while on the other hand steadiness of exchange with Europe would at once induce an influx of much needed capital and confer great advantage on the bank and file of the European community, whose efforts to accumulate a modest competency on which to retire seem under present conditions as hopeless as the labour of Sisyphus, the silver savings of each year being almost if not altogether swallowed up by the depreciation in the gold value of previous accumulations. Take the case, for instance, of a man with a modest salary who five years ago was worth $1,000 invested on a silver basis in Hongkong. To-day his investments would only be worth $900, and he would require to have saved more than $1,600 in the interval to make up the difference between that sum and his original $1,000. Individual cases of hardship of course cannot be allowed to weigh against general trade interests, but it is not clear that those interests would suffer at all if the Colony threw in its lot with the gold countries instead of remaining linked to silver.

REVIEWS.

Books of Japanese Illustrations.

We have received from Messrs. Kelly and Walsh, publishers, three books of illustrations by K. Ogawa, Tokyo—"Lilies of Japan," "Japanese Customs," and "The Restoration," and Military Costume in Old Japan." The first is in color and the other two in black and white. The illustrations are of a high quality, and the book is a work of art, each page a perfect in its loveliness and the faithfulness with which the flowers are reproduced. The illustrations of the Japanese are of a high quality, and the book is a work of art, each page a perfect in its loveliness and the faithfulness with which the flowers are reproduced.

The other two books are the first of a series of publications illustrative of Japanese art, manners, and customs. They have been printed in America, the illustrations being from photographs by Mr. Ogawa. The titles sufficiently explain their character. With each figure is a full description of the principal features in the costume worn, and been carried to the front of the book. The information conveyed is of a fragmentary character and any one who has a systematic study of costumes will have to turn to other sources. The illustrations are of a high quality, and the book is a work of art, each page a perfect in its loveliness and the faithfulness with which the flowers are reproduced.

The costumes depicted differ widely from the Japanese dress of the present day, with regard to the military costume of the samurai, which is a collection of the real armor of old Japan and the other accessories of the warrior costume in Old Japan.

About Penak. By P. A. SWETTERHAM. Singapore: Straits Times Press.

This is a collection of papers on Penak which have recently appeared in the columns of the Straits Times. As the British Resident at Penak, Mr. Swetterham must have had before him a vast amount of material, and he has selected the most interesting and valuable papers for publication. The collection is a most valuable one, and it is a pity that it is not more widely known.

Some of the ways in which shutting out silver is calculated to damage trade are pointed out by Professor Nicholson. Suppose, he says, that owing to the closure of the mints no silver is sent to India, that it acts in the manner of a prohibitive duty, either other imports must take the place of silver or exports from India must be diminished, or both events must occur. If other imports take the place of silver, commercial bills compete with Council bills; if exports diminish there is a less demand for the latter. Again, the silver refused by India will be sent to other countries. In this way they will increase their exports at the expense of India. Thus, whatever benefits are to be expected ultimately from the gold standard, it seems probable that during the period of transition the closure of the mints will be injurious to India's trade and useless to her finance. Such is the Professor's argument, and it seems to us incontrovertible. If the Straits Settlements follow India's example and adopt the rupee or a protected dollar as their currency the silver now sent there would instead be sent to China and Japan so long as those countries were willing to take it, and the trade of China and Japan would be proportionately stimulated. But the change would have a better justification in the Straits than in India, for whereas the latter is a great producing country and the fictitious value of the rupee necessarily acts as an additional tax on the producer, Singapore and Penang, like Hongkong, are mere depots for trade, with a gold currency on the one side and a silver currency on the other. In determining what their own currency shall be, therefore, the considerations that arise are of a different character from those which apply in the case of a producing country. It would, for instance, be a great mistake for China to discard silver for gold, but it does not necessarily follow that it would be a great mistake for Hongkong to do so, for we have no agricultural interest that would be prejudicially affected by the change, while on the other hand steadiness of exchange with Europe would at once induce an influx of much needed capital and confer great advantage on the bank and file of the European community, whose efforts to accumulate a modest competency on which to retire seem under present conditions as hopeless as the labour of Sisyphus, the silver savings of each year being almost if not altogether swallowed up by the depreciation in the gold value of previous accumulations. Take the case, for instance, of a man with a modest salary who five years ago was worth $1,000 invested on a silver basis in Hongkong. To-day his investments would only be worth $900, and he would require to have saved more than $1,600 in the interval to make up the difference between that sum and his original $1,000. Individual cases of hardship of course cannot be allowed to weigh against general trade interests, but it is not clear that those interests would suffer at all if the Colony threw in its lot with the gold countries instead of remaining linked to silver.

THE GOLD RESERVE.

The Gold Reserve in the United States Treasury has fallen to eighty-seven Million dollars, the smallest amount on record.

REVIEWS.

Books of Japanese Illustrations.

We have received from Messrs. Kelly and Walsh, publishers, three books of illustrations by K. Ogawa, Tokyo—"Lilies of Japan," "Japanese Customs," and "The Restoration," and Military Costume in Old Japan." The first is in color and the other two in black and white. The illustrations are of a high quality, and the book is a work of art, each page a perfect in its loveliness and the faithfulness with which the flowers are reproduced. Can you tell me after last night's show about you went to play Moody and Stanley? Well, I went to play Moody and Stanley, and I played the piano on the Rising Star.

Why didn't you go after when you heard this howling mob?—Somebody said, "It is only a drunken Chinaman." You did not think that the man who was shouting was a drunkard?—No, I did not. Some people told me that it was a drunkard, but I did not believe them. I was a member of the Rising Star, and I was a member of the Rising Star.

Then you did not see any assault by the mob on the Rising Star?—No, I did not. I was a member of the Rising Star, and I was a member of the Rising Star. I was a member of the Rising Star, and I was a member of the Rising Star.

Have you had any training in the Navy?—Yes, I have. I was a member of the Rising Star, and I was a member of the Rising Star. I was a member of the Rising Star, and I was a member of the Rising Star.
